

6th Annual Contemporary Issues in Pituitary Disease: Case-based Management Update

Friday, April 9, 2010

About the Conference

Pituitary tumors are more common than generally thought, with a prevalence of about 10% on MR imaging in the general population. At the same time, many endocrinologists and internists may not have sufficient exposure to deal confidently with a variety of pituitary disorders. If not properly treated, pituitary disorders may result in significant morbidity and lower life expectancy. This one-day program will place a heavy emphasis on case discussions to review the best strategies for evaluation and management of pituitary disorders by some of the finest experts in this field. The speakers will share their experience from interesting and/or challenging cases that they have faced. There will be ample time for discussion and questions.

Target Audience

Endocrinologists, family medicine and internal medicine physicians, allied health care providers and neurosurgeons.

Learning Objectives

Upon completion of this activity, the participant will be able to:

1. Discuss the best practices for evaluation, diagnosis and management of a variety of pituitary disorders.
2. Review common pitfalls in biochemical evaluation of patients with pituitary disorders.
3. Discuss interesting and/or challenging pituitary cases with participating clinicians.
4. Discuss new advances in surgical management and radiotherapy of patients with pituitary disorders.
