safe handling of energy sources, and tissue management. Thursday afternoon, there will be a suture laboratory focusing on laparoscopic suturing skills and ultrasound imaging course for the gynecologist. Friday's didactic lectures focus on pelvic anatomy and patient management issues, hand assisted laparoscopic surgery, hysterectomy, tissue extraction, and uterine fibroids. Saturday will be devoted to Endometriosis, both medical and surgical management, and gynecologic oncology issues. Sunday's lectures will focus on pelvic organ prolapse and incontinence, management of laparoscopic complications, and semi live surgical cases. There will be ample time during the symposium to personally interact with nationally known faculty from the three institutions to facilitate an improved knowledge base with development and honing of skills necessary to advance the performance of minimally invasive gynecologic surgery and insuring optimal outcomes for our patients.

This symposium is directed to a national and international audience of practitioners and health care professionals, including obstetricians, and gynecologists, who wish to expand their clinical practice to include more minimally invasive surgical techniques.
